

William Harvey was a teacher at St. Peter High School from 1959 to 1993. It's very hard to describe in a few sentences, the impact of a teacher in a small town who taught some five thousand students over the course of a thirty-five year career. Mr. Harvey treated his school and his job as a teacher with utmost respect, determined to instill in his students an appreciation for the English language, its art, its structure, and its literature. Judging by the number of St. Peter citizens who can recite for their children and grandchildren, Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening or Oh Captain, My Captain, he was very successful in that endeavor.
